The FBI is on the Phone for You

by: Peter Christensen, General Counsel, Liability Insurance Administrators

The FBI released a report earlier this year entitled 2008 Mortgage Fraud Report "Year in Review". It indicated the obvious: that reports of mortgage fraud and investigations of it by the FBI increased significantly in 2008. The FBI further indicated:

"With the anticipated continued upsurge in mortgage fraud cases, the FBI has created the National Mortgage Fraud Team (NMFT); fostered new and existing liaison partnerships within the mortgage industry and law enforcement; and developed new and innovative methods to detect and combat mortgage fraud.

In December 2008, the FBI established the NMFT to assist field offices in addressing the financial crisis, from the mortgage fraud problem and loan origination scams to the secondary markets and securitization. The NMFT provides tools to identify the most egregious mortgage fraud perpetrators, prioritizes investigative efforts, and provides information to evaluate resource needs."

One result of the FBI's intensified effort seems to be that appraisers have been getting more calls than usual from FBI special agents wanting to ask questions about particular reports. The agents almost never indicate specifically what they are investigating (other than "fraud"), who initiated the investigation, or who is the direct subject of the investigation. Often, the agents try to be friendly and say something like: "I'm looking at your report here and I'm just wondering if you can tell me a bit about how you arrived at your value" or "I have a review of your appraisal that has a much lower value, can you help me understand why?" Sometimes, the agents suggest that giving them some information will help them close up the file and not have to bother the appraiser again. The agents will then often also ask the appraiser to come down for an interview or tell the appraiser they'd like to come by and have a look at the file.

I have no doubt that there are some appraisers spread across the country who actually may have crossed the line and may have some culpability for engaging in intentional fraud. My post here is not for those appraisers. The typical situation I see, however, is much more innocent. The appraiser receiving the agent's call is more typically scratching his head trying to figure out why the FBI would be interested in the subject report. It usually seems like the report under scrutiny is no different than any other assignment, except maybe there's been a subsequent foreclosure on the property. And, I do think that in most of these cases when an FBI agent is inquiring about an appraiser's report, there is likely nothing wrong with the report itself. In fact, I've recently seen inquiries from the FBI and other state and federal investigative agencies that seemed to be based on nothing more than a lender having a foreclosed mortgage and a low-ball retrospective appraisal in the file.

What should the good appraiser do when the FBI or any law enforcement officer calls? First, of course, you need to be friendly and polite. The last thing you want to do is give the impression that you're hiding something by being short or difficult. Second, try to determine if the appraisal report that the agent or officer has in front of him really is your work. We've seen cases where law enforcement launched investigations without any idea that the report in their hands obtained from the lender had been altered or forged. Thus, without discussing the results in your report, try to ask the agent or officer to tell you information from the report in front of him. Third, if the agent or officer wants to talk about the specifics of the report, you need to realize that your USPAP ethics duty of confidentiality to your client prevents you from doing so, unless you've received a subpoena (or court order) or have been authorized by your client. (If the investigator is with your state licensing or enforcement agency, the duty of confidentiality, however, does not prevent you from discussing or providing the report.) Thus, you'll need to politely advise the agent or officer that you have that duty to your client and that you cannot violate it by talking about the assignment or results. The same thing goes for complying with a request (as opposed to a subpoena) for your work file. Use this as an opportunity to politely and professionally break off the discussion and then consult with an attorney. Even when a law enforcement investigation is not covered by insurance, your E&O provider should be able to provide a reference to a knowledgeable and economical attorney with whom you can discuss the situation.

And away we go...

We have confirmed receipt of five (5) Appraiser Continuing Education Hours for those that signed and fully-attended the November Membership Education Seminar. We have every intention of submitting each General Membership Education Seminar and Fall Seminar for Continuing Education credits that may be applicable to appraisers, brokers and assessors. We have been working with Ms. Peggy Waugh, whose is responsible for approving all required information and course materials for licensing throughout the State of Michigan. We believe this is an important feature for the members of the IRWA as well as those non-members that choose to attend our informative education programs. We are working on ways to streamline this process for greater efficiency.

Please reference the article identified within this specific newsletter. The administrative year of the Executive Board has been extended to June 30, 2010 for realignment to the International scheduling. The executive board has worked hard through this transmission especially Steve Roon, Chapter 7 Treasurer, who has balanced the funds and re-orchestrated the budgeting for this six month extension. Steve has done an incredible job in the Treasurers position for Chapter 7. Beyond the income and expense organization he has always been timely in reimbursements and payments.

Kim Tassen and Paul Sander are in charge of the 2010 calendar for education seminars including locations, times and speakers. If anyone has specific topics or speakers that they would like to hear, please notify Kim or Paul.

We begin 2010 moving forward after taking many notes through 2009. All of us should embrace the upcoming year for the many great things that are ahead of us.

Norman G. Thomas, SR/WA
Michigan Chapter 7 President

P. S. Check out the article at right and see how many members from our Chapter where identified in International Right of Way magazine for professionalism. We have a great Chapter!

Mary Anne Marr Professional of the Year Award

Mary Anne Marr was presented the Michigan Chapter 7 Professional of the Year Award on Mackinac Island for her numerous years of generosity toward our Chapter.

Mary Anne has served the Chapter in all offices of the Executive Board and as the chair on many committees. She has committed to the Region Secretary and is currently the Region Vice Chair. As a representative to the International Utilities Committee, Mary Anne is currently Member at Large. For recruiting the most new members in 2008, she received the 2008 International Recipient for the Member Appreciation Program. Also, she was recently certified as a Course Facilitator. Mary Anne is employed by Consumers Energy and has been a valuable, active, generous member of Chapter 7 for more than 14 years. In addition to all of her career accomplishments, Mary Anne is a nationally ranked woman pool player.

Thank you Mary Anne, Chapter 7 is extremely fortunate to have you as a member.

CONSUMERS ENERGY: CLEAN COAL PLANT PROJECT REACHES MAJOR MILESTONE WITH AIR PERMIT

JACKSON, Mich., Dec. 29, 2009 – Consumers Energy's clean coal power plant reached a major milestone today with the issuance of an air permit for the $2 billion-plus project.

The 830-megawatt plant is expected to create 1,800 construction jobs, about 2,500 indirect jobs, and then more than 100 permanent jobs after it is operating in 2017. Overall, the plant is projected to provide a $1.2 billion economic boost to Michigan.

"The issuance of the air permit for our new clean coal plant is good news for Michigan. This permit moves our project a step closer to creating badly needed jobs and boosting the state's economy," said John Russell, Consumers Energy's president and chief operating officer.

"It also provides best-in-class protection for the environment with an offset for carbon dioxide emissions from the new plant and a substantial net reduction in overall emissions from our coal-fired generating fleet. It also will allow us to fully implement our balanced energy plan and provide customers with reliable, competitively priced electricity in the future."

The new plant is part of Consumers Energy's Balanced Energy Initiative. That comprehensive plan calls for a portfolio of diverse energy resources to meet the power needs of the utility's 1.8 million electric customers over the next 20 years.

A recent analysis of the plan details how two-thirds of the projected new energy resources needed to serve customers through 2018 will be provided by renewable energy sources, energy efficiency and demand side management (reducing customer usage during peak periods).

The utility launched its energy efficiency initiative in July with programs to help business and residential customers save energy and save money. In its first six months of operation this initiative has benefited more than 170,000 Michigan homes with energy-saving measures.

Consumers Energy plans to invest more than $1.2 billion to build 450 megawatts of wind generating capacity and has secured wind development easements for more than 57,000 acres in Mason, Tuscola and Huron counties. The utility already is the largest supplier of renewable energy in Michigan, with more than 4 percent of the power that it supplies to customers coming from renewable sources.

The air permit for the new clean coal plant includes a commitment from Consumers Energy to retire up to seven of its older, less efficient coal units after the new unit begins operating at the company's Karn/Weadock Generating Complex, near Bay City. Five of these older units will be retired following operation of the new unit, with retirement of the additional two older units dependent on customer need. The utility has the oldest fleet of coal plants in the nation with an average age of 50 years.

Russell said the plant retirements are consistent with the company's Balanced Energy Initiative and will substantially reduce overall emissions from the company's coal-fired fleet. The Balanced Energy Initiative approach – the new plant plus the eventual retirements of some existing plants and expanded renewable energy and energy efficiency – is expected to provide emissions reductions by 2018 from the current levels from the company's existing coal fleet. Emissions are expected to be down as much as 91 percent for sulfur dioxide; 83 percent for nitrogen oxides; and 81 percent for mercury.

"The new coal plant will use state-of-the-art technology and be one of the cleanest coal power plants in the world. We've said all along that building the new unit would have an environmental benefit because it would allow us to retire some of our older units and result in emissions reduction," Russell said.

The new plant will be designed to utilize carbon capture and storage technology once it becomes commercially and economically viable. Consumers Energy has been working with Western Michigan University scientists to evaluate the suitability of the geology surrounding the plant site to store carbon dioxide. Preliminary analysis indicates that the geology surrounding the plant site looks promising for carbon sequestration.

The next major step for the project is filing a certificate of necessity application with the Michigan Public Service Commission. The company expects to file that application in 2010.

"The certificate of necessity process is new for Michigan and was established in the state's new energy law, put in place last year. With that process, the Michigan Public Service Commission conducts a comprehensive evaluation of the new power plant and evaluates alternatives. It also gives all stakeholders the opportunity to analyze and comment on the project," he said. "This forward-looking regulatory process is one of many public policy improvements made in the state's new energy law."

The Balanced Energy Initiative is a key part of Consumers Energy's Growing Forward strategy, which calls for investing more than $6 billion in the utility over the next five years. That includes significant investments in energy efficiency, renewable energy, environmental and customer service enhancements, and new power generation.

The substantial investments make Consumers Energy one of the largest – if not the largest – investor in the state of Michigan. Those investments will help the utility maintain and improve service to customers, create jobs, boost the state's economy, and expand the state's tax base.

Consumers Energy, the principal subsidiary of CMS Energy (NYSE: CMS), provides natural gas and electricity to nearly 6.5 million of Michigan's 10 million residents in all 68 Lower Peninsula counties.

Law and Legislation

February 10, 2010 • Today, the House Regulatory Reform Committee took up HB 5313. The bill would amend Article 26 (Real Estate Appraisers) of the Occupational Code, 1980 PA 299, to alter the composition of the board of real estate appraisers. Currently, the nine-member board consists of 3 public members and 6 professional members; the professional members comprise 3 certified general real estate appraisers, 1 certified residential real estate appraiser, and 2 state licensed real estate appraisers. The bill would replace the 2 state licensed real estate appraisers with 2 members who are either state licensed real estate appraisers or certified residential real estate appraisers.

The bill would also delete a requirement that at least one of the professional members be employed by a state or nationally chartered bank, savings bank, savings and loan, credit union, federally chartered farm credit institutions, or entity regulated under the Mortgage Brokers, Lenders, and Servicers Licensing Act, 1987 PA 173.

Supreme Court dashes hopes of backers of federal transmission siting Courts Deny Federal Backstop Siting Authority

E & E Daily, 01/20/2010 • Katherine Ling, E&E reporter

The expansion of electric transmission needed to meet U.S. goals for renewable energy and reliability will be up to Congress after the Supreme Court refused yesterday to review a lower court's decision that narrowed federal authority over transmission siting.

The Supreme Court rejected a request from Edison Electric Institute (EEI) for review of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals' decision that the 2005 energy law failed to authorize Federal Energy Regulatory Commission "backstop" authority for transmission siting if a state had denied a project. Many lawmakers, utilities and independent transmission companies say states are holding up a greater expansion of transmission.

"It's pretty clear that the only solution to this is legislative," said James Hoecker, outside counsel to the pro-transmission association WIRES.

"There is no hope under current law; if a state vetoes a project, they are perfectly able to do that. It is certainly not a recipe for an upgrade of the transmission system," Hoecker said. WIRES supports states' rights to site transmission, but it believes there should be federal backstop authority on every transmission proposal, Hoecker said.

Jim Owen, a spokesman for EEI, agreed that the decision curbs FERC's already limited authority on transmission siting. "It's a disappointing outcome that certainly it will reinforce the probability that we will have continued gridlock," he said.

State regulators welcomed the Supreme Court's rejection of EEI's petition. "The decision is good news because it ensures that those who know the local and regional geographies and economies best -- the state regulators -- remain responsible for siting and planning transmission lines," said Robert Thormeyer, spokesman for the National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners.

The Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee already moved to address the 4th Circuit's decision and the need for transmission in the energy bill passed last June. A central part of the bill is a transmission planning, siting and cost allocation piece that provides even greater siting authority for FERC, although states would still have the ability to review the project first.

But the bill is currently intertwined with the fate of the climate bill, and many doubt the Senate has the political willpower to pass the controversial measure this session.

The urgent need to build transmission and the Supreme Court's decision could push interested groups and lawmakers to carve out the transmission title from the energy bill, as others have advocated for provisions like the Clean Energy Development Administration.

Owen said EEI is examining how to proceed on transmission policy, but the next step is not clear. The Supreme Court decision, he said, "will in some way shine a brighter light on that, but not in ways I can predict right now."

But Bill Wicker, a spokesman for Sen. Jeff Bingaman (D-N.M.), chairman of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, said taking transmission out of the energy and climate bill doesn't seem likely.

"There is no other legislation that is expected to come up soon in the Senate on which transmission can travel -- transmission is not health care, it's not Wall Street reform, it's not a jobs bill," he said.

He added, "Transmission -- unless you want to carve out a week or two of floor debate -- I don't think you can bring it up as a stand-alone."
